ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A depression is formed in a semiconductor substrate, in which an integrated circuit is formed, from a first surface of the semiconductor substrate. A conductive section is formed in the depression. The conductive section is caused to project from a second surface of the semiconductor substrate opposite to the first surface. The conductive section is ground or polished until the fresh surface is exposed.